

reports. Pay close attention to the people who live there. Do they look content and well cared-for? Try visiting at mealtimes to see how the staff interact with the residents.

However traumatic a move may be initially, once the transition is made and the trauma fades, seniors quite often fall in love with their new lifestyle. Days are filled with outings, movies, guest lecturers, new friends and people to dine with every night. Oftentimes, once some time has passed, you might find that your parent wouldn't trade their new life for living alone again.
